To whom it may concern

I am pleased to write this letter of recommendation for Yashashree Pund, a recent graduate of the Department of Mechanical Engineering at the Indian Institute of Technology (IIT) Tirupati. Having observed her academic performance and research development over the past two to three years, I recommend Ms. Yashashree Pund without reservation for any academic, research, or professional opportunity she chooses to pursue.

I first met Yashashree when she enrolled in my Fluid Mechanics course. Last semester, she approached me to undertake her two-semester B.Tech Project (BTP) titled “Design and Development of a Solar-Assisted Power System for a LALE (Low-Altitude, Long-Endurance) UAV.” I initially had reservations about assigning this project to undergraduates; it is highly complex, requires a multidisciplinary approach, and Yashashree initially lacked the specialized expertise required for such advanced aerial design and analysis.

However, Yashashree quickly proved my initial concerns unfounded. Demonstrating exceptional self-motivation and a steep learning curve, she mastered the necessary tools independently. In just six months, her contributions have been remarkable. Through her dedication and meticulous attention to detail, she has already successfully completed over 70-80% of the project objectives. Furthermore, she is concurrently contributing to the design and development of a novel cowling for drone propellers—a testament to her ability to manage multiple high-level technical tasks.

I am confident that her efforts will result in significant academic output; I expect her team's technical work to translate into a functional product and at least two publications in international journals. Yashashree is an intelligent, committed researcher whom I would rank among the top 1% of students I have ever supervised.

Beyond her technical prowess, Yashashree stands out for her professional reliability. She consistently delivers complex modules in a creative and timely manner. She possesses excellent communication skills and a level of character and maturity that makes her a role model among her peers. Yashashree Pund is, without a doubt, an exceptional candidate for graduate studies. I recommend her to you without reservation. Please feel free to contact me if you require any further information.
